Deborah Diana was born to be an artist. From her early childhood days “painting” the sidewalks and brick walls of her native Philadelphia home, Deborah was encouraged and nurtured by her grandmother to draw and create to her hearts content. A graduate of PAFA, Deborah defined and refined her interest to depicting the human form. A foray into the world of competitive bodybuilding provided another opportunity to create her own physique as a work of art. The artist as both the medium and art itself. She is best known for her dramatic depictions of butterflies and the spirit of metamorphosis they represent- a fitting transition from her days of bodybuilding. During this period she also taught art for over twenty years at a private school in northern Pennsylvania and in her own studio. Today, Deborah turns her attention to the avian world. There are many ways of observing and interpreting our world through art. Deborah shows how she has developed her own personal way of depicting birds.
